

If a member of your household needs an extra room for other reasons

The disabled member of my household requires a bedroom for therapeutic/care purposes/to store medical equipment in relation to their disability.

Explain here all or some of the following:

- Why does the person need an extra room?
- What are their health problems?
- What is the room used for in relation to their disability?
- What would happen if the person could not have an extra room?
- What would the effect on their health be, or the health of other family members/carers if they could not have the extra room?

To ignore my needs/the needs of this person and treating me/them as not being entitled to an extra room is discriminatory and unlawful in relation to the Human Rights Act 1998.
