

If your home has been specially adapted to meet the needs of a disabled person

My home has been specially adapted to meet the needs of a disabled person. The person is called (add name here)

Explain here all or some of the following:

- How has your home been adapted?
- What are the needs of the disabled person?
- What would happen if the person could not access the adaptations?
- What would the effect on their health be, or the health of other family members/carers if they could not access the adaptations?

These health problems would make moving from my/their home harmful, and requiring such a move, through making under-occupancy deductions, is discriminatory and unlawful in relation to the Human Rights Act 1998.
